

The Factors Influencing Life Trajectories in Different Generations of School Graduates

Abstract: The article examines the course of life and the differences of various generations.

Under the course of life is understood a sequence of sequence of events.

We assume that as a result of the need to adapt to the rapidly changing environment, the generations (the representative groups) have used different models and means of implementing life strategies.

The results of the study show that in generations' scenarios there are significant differences.

The generations in various ways appear to build their life scenarios that differ in their primary paths: education, employment and income, family and birth of the first child, health.

Keywords: different generations, life trajectories, sequence of events.
